

Stephen Plunkard, FASLA

Urban Planner and Strategist

Stephen Plunkard, Urban Planner and Strategist, has practiced planning, urban design, landscape architecture and public engagement for more than 40 years. He is an award-winning urban planner and teaches in the College of Architecture and Art at Norwich University. Most his work has been in the United States and Canada, but, on occasion, he has worked in Europe, the Middle East, Africa and South Asia. Projects he has been involved in have won awards from the Urban Land Institute, American Planning Association, American Institute of Architects, American Society of Landscape Architects, National Trust for Historic Preservation and the Alberta Council of Engineers. He was invited to the White House as an SBA Small Business of the Year and has worked for small, medium sized and multi-national consulting firms throughout his career. He served on a select team of consultants on the restoration of Gulfport, Mississippi post-Katrina, and was the keynote speaker at an international waterfront conference in Glasgow, Scotland. He was born in England and has lived in continental Europe, the United States, and Canada. He is a citizen of both the United States and United Kingdom.

Central to Stephen's success is the collaborative network of: architects, engineers, scientists, graphic and urban designers, branding and marketing specialists. The foundation of his reputation is based on his deep belief and understanding of creative problem solving and consensus building. His skills have been employed by icons of business and industry, as well as, cities, underserved neighborhoods and charitable organizations
